POEMS PENNED OF LATE.

Mother's Sunbonnet There are hats by the dozen and score On their pegs in the shop windows bright; And bonnets with ribbons galore, The eyes of each passer invite-Some soft as the neck of a dove. Or as apple blooms jeweled with daw; Some fruit as a day dream of love— And dearer, by far, it is true! But, friend, I would barter them all

And trim them with graenbacks and gold For a moment of time to recall From the dust of the grave, as of old, A patient and glorified face And the checkered sunbon: et, whose ris Was touched with a halo of grace From mother's eyes—faded and dim!
—Forrest Crissey, in Chicago Mail. One Point Assured. I know not if she's tail or short,

Or fat or wondrous frail:

I know not if her face be dark. Or red or spectral pale. I know naught of her feet and bands, Her nose, or eyes, or hair; And, what is more, the truth to tell,

I don't a copper care. In fact, if her I chanced to meet Beneath the noonday glow, From Adam's antique moldy self, But this I positively know -I'll soon be with the dead If she that old plane bangs Much longer o'er my head

Harvest Song. Laugh out, laugh out, ye orehard lands, With all your ripened store; Such bounteous measure nature vields:

With earth's broad lap abrim with food, The azure skies above. The heavens whisper: "Earth is good;" Earth answers: "Heaven is love." The winds that wander from the west O'er fields afar or near Find plenty nowhere manifest In richer stores than here.

The golden rick, the bursting bin, Of rich and ripened grain
Bespeak the wealth which all may win
In industry's domain. The corn fields set in grand array

Of solid rank and row Are streams of wealth which set this way. And soon shall overflow. Laugh out, laugh out, ye ripened fields, With e'er increasing mirth: The joy your bounteous measure yields Shall bless the whole round earth.

Timothy. Pimothy grows in the tangle tall Between the road and the gray stone wall;
From its long green stalks upreaching high its long green flugers point to the sky;
And some turn purple, and some look tanned
To a ruddy brown, like a sunbarned hand.
Bending and beckening to and fro. And the redtop ripples, feathery fine, And the duisies shake and the buttercups shine Stirring whenever the light wind blows. Under the warm sky timothy grows.

Timothy goes where the blown grass bows, Sturdily trudging behind the cows; His hard little feet are red and bare, And his brown face laughs peath his tow-white hair. As blue are his round eyes, boyish quick As the ripe blue berries he stops to pick;

And his few front teeth are sharp and small, e the chipmunk's he chases along the wall And whistling and following over the hill, While the cow bells clink in the evening still, Where in the tangle his namesake grows Under the bright sky Timothy goes.

OHN LINDSAY was the richest man in Hilton. He had begun at the bottom, but by perseverance, hard work and a natural bent for amassing money, he was now at the top of the social and commercial ladder. He possessed several large farms of the fertile bottom land, countless flocks and herds, a wife and daughter. His wife was one of those light-hearted, faded, discouraged-looking women and was seldom counted

But the daughter was of far different material. She was tall and lithe with suple grace that made people knowng her birth wonder whence it came, while she was not lacking in mental strength. Her face was somewhat oval, but with a very firm mouth and she rejoiced in a crop of short, brown carls and large, clear, truthful, gray eyes. Of late, though, a cloud had been very often on the smooth brow and the clear, gray eyes, often shadowed with vague unrest. The cause was this.

Rachel, that was the daughter's name, in addition to being the sole ornament of the family, was obliged to apply the religion. Her mother, it is true, was a "pro essor,'' but being such a weak, watery creature that counted for but little. In her younger days a traveling revivalist had visited Hilton, one of those "shepherds" who believe in the scheerful doctrine of total depravity, and had seared Rachel nearly out of her wits with his cheerful, at any rate warm, descriptions of the hell that was awning before her unregenerate soul. She was seared into a profession of faith and from that time forth so effective was the good man's preaching, lived in constant terror of the God she should have loved. At this time, though, the health of the preacher who had ministered to the little congregation gave out and he was forced to suspend operations for awhile, and a new
